

SELECTED BY CALEB SECRIST.

It may be objected that were this art constantly practiced life would be too fatiguing for endurance. This is, however, a mistake. The man who walks round and round without an object is not less, but more, fatigued than the one who walks with firm step, the same distance to reach a given point. Thought is always busy, and when it only moves in a useless circle it is more wearisome because more uninteresting, than when it marches, with steady and elastic tread, to the goal of knowledge. The habit of thinking well is of itself not fatiguing; but full of interest and pleasure. It draws out the powers in-
